

EL MAS DE L'A RACORELL

ORIGIN

La Morera, Priorat, Catalunya

VARIETIES

Garnatxa Peluda, Garnatxa Negra, Garnatxa Gris

VINEYARD

From organically (converting to biodynamics) farmed parcels of younger co-planted vines at 500m elevation in red clay and licorella.

VINIFICATION METHOD

The grapes were harvested by hand, with no more than 50% destemmed before a long maceration in concrete tanks. The wine was then pressed and racked into neutral French foudre and 600L barrels to age for at least 12 months. The finished wine was bottled without fining, filtering, and only a small addition of SO<sub>2</sub>.

PRODUCER PROFILE

Alfredo Arribas is that rare figure who is able to move between two very distinct worlds – those of architecture and winegrowing. Alfredo is a multi-disciplinary architect who has a body of work spanning the globe. During the 1990s, the modern style of Catalan wine was surging. Like many others Alfredo caught the wine bug, and choosing to focus his efforts in his native Catalonia he bought property in Priorat in 2001, and has been exploring the region's diverse micro-climates ever since. With his project El Mas de L'A, Alfredo has identified La Morera de Montsant – a valley sandwiched between the distinguished villages of Cornudella and Poboleda near Escaladei – as a place to make a new style of Priorat focused more on finesse than concentration. La Morera sits at 500 meters elevation and possesses a diversity of soil types with many north-facing vineyards. Alfredo co-planted a whole spectrum of Garnachas – Negra, Peluda, Blanco, Gris, etc. along with other indigenous grape varieties that thrive in the area, recognizing that the vineyard of the future, due to uncertain weather, should have a diversity of plantings to handle the roller coaster of climate change. Once described as an architect who “connects creativity and nature”, we have no doubt Alfredo is doing the same with wine, and his hunch about La Morera is paying off. From world class whites to vibrant claretes and finely detailed reds, El Mas de L'A is rendering a new and dynamic face of Priorat.
