Quirihue, Itata Valley, Chile.

VINEYARD

From an ancient vineyard now farmed by Miguel Antonio Melo Henriquez. The vines are at about 150m altitude, planted on granitic clay-loam soil. The grapes for this wine come from the bottom of the parcel, where the grass is kept high, and the grapes struggle to ripen.

VINIFICATION METHOD

Sangrada and Zarandada are two wines from the same fruit made in different ways. All of the grapes for Sangrada were destemmed and pressed very gently into neutral plastic fermenters. When fermentation finished, some of the pressings from Zarandada were added to the juice to impart color and structure. A flor formed, and the wine rested in plastic tank until racking and bottling.

PRODUCER PROFILE

Las Fermentadas is a project helmed by Alice L'Estrange, open to any women who would like to make natural wine collaboratively at her winery as a team. In 2021, Alice worked with Coline Marre, a French Oenologist, and Isidora Munita, a Chilean raw milk cheesemaker. They purchased grapes from an organically farmed, chemical free vineyard in Quirihue, in the Itata Valley farmed by Miguel Antonio Melo Henriquez who had been selling the farm's grapes as table grapes due to the lack of a market for wines from the area. In the future, the participants in this project will change, and they may work with grapes from different sources, but Las Fermentadas will always be about collaborative women-made wines.

VINTAGE REPORT

The 2021 vintage was on the cooler side here, and these parcels at the base of the vineyard are always the last to ripen, due to competition with ground cover and thicker soils.
